Sioman was born into a well-off family as the fourth son. As circumstances that would make him the heir were all but unthinkable, his education focused more on science, mathematics, and nature than working to prepare him for leadership. His life was set to follow a quiet path until, well, what had been unthinkable before happened. As he returned home from an outing one evening, he was greeted by silence, instead of the customary greeting from one of the estate's servants. He slowly made his way through the darkened halls, searching for any sign of his family. The dark state of his home didn't register at first as panic set in, and he began to run through the halls, calling out for his brothers, then his parents, then anybody at all, but he received no response. When his eyes finally adjusted to(...)

Faits marquants: -Youngest of four sons of a noble family -Returned home one day to find his family viciously killed, with odd sigils painted onto the walls of his childhood home in blood; the event fueled his interest in understanding the occult. -Was left with a phobia of the dark, descending into fear and panic if he does not have some sort of light nearby.
